¶1. Independent Al-Quds runs its daily editorial under the headline, "The status of Bush's vision" (6/12): "... Bush has six more months in the White House. Let's assume that the American President and his team have made every possible effort to make progress on the Road map, meanwhile the Israelis, especially [Premier] Ehud Olmert, could exit the political arena at any second, leaving Israel in the midst of ... Kadima party elections and [early] parliamentary elections... So, who will be in charge of negotiations and the peaceful settlement portfolio if Olmert leaves office? Even if he does stay, there is agreement among Israelis that Olmert is not qualified or even able to achieve a peace agreement with the Palestinians or the Syrians... when Bush said at the end of his European tour that he will, until his last day in office, continue his efforts to achieve peace in the region, [he was recognizing current] ... realities and lowering expectations for Israeli-Palestinian negotiations to that of a goal of merely producing some kind of declaration of principles, without dealing with details. In his statement, Bush is giving a kind of diplomatic apology before the [last] possibilities of reaching an agreement and implementing his famous vision vanish..."

¶2. Independent Al-Ayyam carries an op-ed by columnist Samih Sh'bayb entitled, "Internal dialogue... possible mechanisms" (6/12): "It was clear from the [Palestinian] presidential initiative for internal talks, that Palestinian efforts will be made within a greater Arab framework that will pave the way for talks and their success. These efforts have already produced a... quick outcome in the official declaration of Egypt as the host for the talks... there are some [additional] efforts by both Hamas and Islamic Jihad to conduct these talks under Arab sponsorship, especially the sponsorship of the Arab League... it looks like everything is ready to launch dialogue and tackle all problematic and complicated issues..."
